

Concluso il Congresso laburista

Il voto sul Vietnam impone a Wilson scelte concrete

Un vasto processo di revisione investe i rapporti con gli Stati Uniti e con l'Europa continentale

Nostro servizio
LONDRA, 6. Il congresso laburista (che ha ancora stamane discusso lo stato dei servizi sociali e della relazione in Gran Bretagna prima della chiusura formale dei lavori a Scarborough) ha messo il governo Wilson di fronte alle proprie responsabilità. Una forte linea critica ha sostenuto e illuminato gli argomenti basilari (economia e la sterlina, le spese militari e il rapporto con gli USA, il Vietnam e la pace nel mondo, la ricerca di un ruolo internazionale e l'Europa) in un dibattito che ha costantemente visto la leadership sulla difensiva. Non è affatto agevole giustificare, davanti a un partito le cui speranze elettorali erano state accese proprio in questi quattro anni o sono, una realtà che drammaticamente contrasta con le promesse di allora: ristagno all'interno, immobilismo degli affari esteri e soprattutto indecisione sulle scelte di fondo.

Wilson, per primo, si è reso conto di quanto fosse arduo questo compito. E' per questo che, nel riflettere i «sentimenti» dell'assemblea con lo anticipare certi provvedimenti amministrativi per alleviare il pesante stato di cose attuale, ha poi evitato il confronto diretto rimandando il suo tema favorito della « conquista delle frontiere della scienza ». La realtà presente ha comunque assicurato la demitizzazione immediata di ogni retorica: la rivista laburista New Statesman definisce oggi il discorso del primo ministro come « infinitamente deprimente, una logora antologia di Harold Wilson antico e moderno ».

In un certo senso dunque Wilson è rimasto estraneo al dibattito che verteva su fatti immediati di ben altra urgenza e sulle decisioni che da questi fatti condizioneranno politicamente il futuro. Wilson, assai più preoccupante e decisivo che non l'avvento di una nuova era tecnologica.

Vietnam: il congresso ha ripetuto al governo che è ora di dire basta agli americani. Non è solo la sinistra laburista che lo afferma. E' la stragrande maggioranza del popolo inglese ad esserne convinta. Il Financial Times oggi osserva che, non la sua difesa del silenzio come arma diplomatica, il governo ha di diplomazia solo una cosa: « di essere andato sempre più ritirandosi dentro il campo americano ». Poiché la tattica della « comprensione » è adoperata fino ad oggi da Wilson e Brown non ha avuto alcun effetto presso Washington. Il Financial Times conclude, se non altro, che Londra ha effettivamente esaurito la sua influenza sugli USA. La cosiddetta « relazione speciale » è morta. A questa conclusione sono giunti tutti gli ambienti politici inglesi, anche quelli più vicini al governo e compresi gli stessi conservatori.

Il che vuol dire che il processo di riesame della propria posizione fra America ed Europa è andato e sta andando avanti davvero, in profondità, nella coscienza dell'opinione pubblica. E quando si discute delle possibilità di ingresso in Europa significa quindi che non si può condurre l'argomento in astratto (come il governo si ostina a fare) con riaffermazioni della propria « vocazione europeista », senza spingere in concreto che cosa si tratti di fare. Questo è esattamente quanto il congresso di Scarborough ha cercato di conoscere dal suo governo rinnovando, anche in questo settore, l'invito a una più ampia riflessione sugli indirizzi generali di politica interna.

La CRI annuncia: prossima la partenza dei mercenari dal Congo
GINEVRA, 6. Il direttore della Croce rossa internazionale, Roger Gallucci, ha annunciato oggi che i mercenari bianchi e i gendarmi katanghesi che li hanno appoggiati, hanno accettato di lasciare il Congo dietro garanzia di un salvacondotto e di un impegno della CRI a proteggere la loro incolumità. Il capo dei mercenari, Jean Schramme, ha firmato un documento in questo senso, in data 24 settembre. Gallucci ha dichiarato che la CRI curerà l'arrivo dei mercenari prima nel Ruanda e quindi a Malta. I gendarmi katanghesi invece si stabiliranno nel Zambia, che ha loro offerto ospitalità. La destinazione Malta per i mercenari è stata scelta per ragioni tecniche: si vuole portarli anzitutto fuori dell'Africa e in un luogo dal quale senza difficoltà possano scegliere la loro destinazione definitiva.
