Several users have suggested there should be a way to reverse the anagram feature to return to the original random text. This feature is already somewhat built-in. Whenever you generate random text, the resulting text is put on the clipboard. But if you use the anagram feature, it changes the text in the window but the original text remains on the clipboard. Therefore, you can effectively reverse (undo) the anagram just by clicking in the window, have suggested there should be a way to reverse the anagram feature to return to the original random text. ### MacLorem gener

MacLorem generates random filler text for artists, graphic designers, typesetters and others who need to generate mock-ups or spec art for clients, publishers or employers. Most people who have done mock-ups are familiar with the classic "Lorem ipsum" phrase, the Latin text which is often used to fill in spaces where text will be put at a later time. MacLorem uses the classic "lorem ipsum" phrase to generate random text, providing more variety and a more realistic, non-repetitive and naturally uneven look. Simply clicking on a button marked Generate will create random text, placing it in MacLorem's main window and simultaneously placing it on your clipboard so it is ready to paste into the document you are designing.
